In court, Sarah is known for being steely, courageous and 'on point'. Her preparation is thorough and painstaking; with a keen eye for detail and the ability to digest paperwork quickly and efficiently. Sarah is widely recognised for working to the highest standards of client care and is often asked to act in urgent cases requiring particular sensitivity. A senior solicitor recently commended her "highly intelligent legal scholarship in submissions made to the Supreme Court." Calmly reassuring, she is adept at explaining the often-complex processes involved in proceedings.

EXPERIENCE

Sarah is regularly instructed in all aspects of private law proceedings including internal and international relocation, holidays abroad, and cases under the inherent jurisdiction. Sarah has recently acted in cases concerned with the interplay between the 1951 Geneva Convention on asylum and the 1980 Hague Convention. Sarah has extensive experience in conducting fact findings in cases of allegations of domestic abuse, and in complex and intractable cases involving allegations of alienation and often represents children through their Rule 16.4 Guardians and is relied upon for the experience she brings to the role. Sarah is particularly aware of the sensitivity and difficult nature of these cases for her clients and is astute in getting to the heart of the issue, providing sensible, robust and practical advice.

Sarah advises and represents parties in financial remedies upon divorce and claims under Schedule 1 to the Children Act 1989. Sarah's practice increasingly involves disputed business or pension assets and complicated jurisdictional issues often involving assets abroad. Sarah has experience in cases concerning financial relief following a foreign divorce.

Sarah has extensive previous experience in public law work from which she brings significant experience in managing extensive and complex disclosure, in cross examination of experts and in contested factfinding hearings. Sarah employs these skills successfully in her current areas of practice.
