OVERVIEW

Winner of the award for the Family Law Young Barrister of the Year (LexisNexis 2021), Srishti is sought after for her approachable, technically astute manner. She wins the trust of the court as well as her clients, navigating the high conflict of cases with momentum and tenacity. She has an eye for detail and is particularly experienced with vulnerable clients and cases involving complex cultural considerations. Srishti accepts instructions in public and private children cases, as well as financial remedy disputes.

EXPERIENCE

Srishti has a prolific research background. In 2020, she co-authored a critical analysis of the government's panel report on the risk of harm to children and parents in private law cases; the precursor to the Domestic Abuse Act 2021. Later that year, she published a tripartite article in the summer issues of the Family Law Journal. Her work undertook an intersectional analysis of race and gender, and the application of the welfare principle in child radicalisation cases.

Her comprehensive interest in the law underpins her broad-ranging practise. Within public and private disputes concerning children, Srishti has worked on cases involving FGM, forced marriage, factitious illness, parental alienation, and intra-jurisdictional disputes. Srishti also has experience of complex matrimonial finance cases involving material non-disclosure and set-aside applications under S.37 of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973.

Srishti offers training and advice to multiple pro bono organisations, and has co-led a seminar series for LawWorks on the proper approach to case managing domestic abuse and parental alienation cases.

Separately, Srishti is a trained civil and commercial mediator, and is dedicated to diversity and equality at the Bar. She is a founding member of Bridging the Bar, partnering with over 70 chambers and the Supreme Court to provide mentorship and work experience to aspiring barristers from underrepresented backgrounds. She reverse mentors with the Bar Standards Board, and co-chairs chambers' own Diversity and Equality committee. Srishti also sits on the scholarship committee for the Family Law Bar Association.
